Dear The Federal Communications Commission,

I oppose the "flat fee" tax increase on the low volume telephone call users. If I had the money to pay all these tax increases I'd get the opportunity to enjoy some of the benefits the rich enjoy and have a phone with a calling plan, but since I don't and barely have the money to pay the bills I already have, along with all the tax increases already passed, I won't ever have the opportunity to indulge in any benefits of calling plans and now you want to take away the only way I might have to call for help if my 119,000 mile vehicle has on it if by chance it would break down on the interstate on my way to or home from work. It's not bad enough living life poor and you want us to risk our lives by not having the means to call for help in an emergency.
Pam Yoder

Sincerely,

Pamela Yoder
